CARDINAL LAURENZI.

DEATH OF THE POPE'S MOST TRUSTED FRIEND-ALL SOULS' DAY OBSERVANCE.

Paris, November 3. One of the most diplomatic members of the Sacred College of Cardinals, Charles Laurenzi, has just died. He was the member most particularly intrusted by the present Pope with secret missions abroad and negotiations with non-official agents of foreign governments. Whenever Lord Salisbury or Mr. Gladstone sent a member of Parliament or a Foreign Office official on a special mission to dinal Laurenzi was charged to give verbal in-structions to the Nuncio representing the Holy See at Brussels as to the means he should take to pre-vent a marriage between the Princess Clemenand the Prince of Naples. He received Comte de Mun when he went a few years ago as a politide ann when a tree and prepared him for the Pope's change of front in a republican direction. As the Pope is a third party to the Franco-Russian entente, which is said above all things to be hostile to the kingdom of Italy, Laurenzi had to exert his diplomatic talents to keep the clergy of Russian Poland quiet. National patriotism had to yield to the wider patriotism which animates prelates and priests of the Catholic Church—the independence of the Pope first, and then the independence of Poland, if they had a mind to labor earnestly for it Cardinal Laurenzi's and the Pope's minds may be said to have become twin minds. They are both general. Pecci tried to revive science and learning in his diocese and was ably seconded by Laurenzi, who was regular in his attendance at the conversaziones held at the Archbishop's Palace. He turned down the scientific and literary tasks which his Archbishop set before him and gave an example of eminent, or, rather, pre-eminent virtues to the diocese. He was also an eloquent preacher. Plus IX, on the recommendation of Pecci, named Laurenzi Bishop of Amata and coadjutor of Perugia. Next year, his chief being raised to the Papal throne, Laurenzi was called to Rome to fill the high and responsible office of Uditore del Santissimo and Assessor of the Tribunal of the Inquisition. His function was to temper indiscreet zeal and to give a more liberal direction to the judges, who, knowing that he was in relations of the closest confidence with the Pope, allowed him to guide them. Laurenzi was also placed by him to guide them. Laurenzi was also placed by the Pope in non-official relations with the Corps Diplomatique. It was he who really dealt with all the From The Providence Journal. knotty and tangled questions that arose between the Holy See and foreign governments and courts. He had a light hand, a clear head and was free cember, 1880. He bore the title Saint Anastasius ad Palatium, of the fourth order of Cardinal priests. The Church of Saint Anastasus is on a slope of the Palatine, and on the foundations of the oldest church in Rome. According to tradition it stands on the spot whence Romulus started to trace with plough the circular line on which a city wall was a arise. It was rebuilt by the Altieri family in the seventeenth century. The original one dated from the second century, and was 450 years older the seventeenth century. The original one dated from the second century, and was 450 years older than the Church of Saint Ambroise at Milan. In the olden time the Popes used to celebrate the Dawn Mass on Christmas morning, on the altar of St. Anastasius.

The late Cardinal once came on a secret mission to M. Grevy. He was often in relation with French Foreign Ministers. France is the Protector of the Latin Christians in the Levant and Asia, and the Cardinal was at the head of the department of the Propaganda for Oriental Affairs. He was also the great patron of the Hasilican monks of Geotto Fernata, the famous Greek abbey founded by the Emperor Otto, and of whom Cardinal Gonzalvi was the Abbot.

The Pope misses deeply this friend of fifty years' standing, whose friendship never falled him and whose discretion was never at faut. He might be said to have steered St. Peter's bark, of which His Holiness is now the figurehead. At the Pope's great age, the loss he has sustained in Cardinal Laurenz's death is irreparable.

The Fourse du Travail, which the Government keeps closed, made no sign on All Souis' Day, Its Immbers, I dare say, were in the thick of all the street demonstrations in favor of the Franco-Russian alliance, though the committee of the Bourse du Travail and the delegates of most of the 170 trades unions represented there have protested against Republican France "linking herself with a tyrant more Asiatic than European in his methods of government." The committee has expelled all the members who accepted tickets for the gala fete got up at the Opera House by the Paris press in compliment to the officers of the Russian squadron.

I think this punishment a righteous one. A more disgraceful function never came off in Paris. M. Arthur Meyer, secretary to the late Blanche d'Autigny, the original of Zola's Nana, was so wanting in tact as to invite the Princess Marguerite de Chartres to grace the fete with her father and mother and her successful rival in the affections of the Duc d'Orleans, Mme. Melba. The been a subject of long and serious discussion. The great desideratum was to find a paint that would most effectively deceive the watchfulness of the most effectively deceive the watchfulness of the enemy. It has been decided that all vessels engaged in naval combat are best protected and rendered least conspicuous by a coat of yellowish brown opaint, put not only on the hull but on every part of the ship that is exposed to view. This is coming back to the practice that prevailed with vessels of the United States Navy more than a generation ago, when their hulls, smokepipes and spars were painted a straw color.

MEDICAL AND SANITARY NOTES.

INFECTIOUSNESS OF MUMPS.-According to some authorities, this disease may prove infectious throughout the whole of its course, while others are of the opinion that this is only the case at the commencement of the attack. In regard to this question, some light is presented by Dr. Rendu, in question, some light is presented by Dr. Rendu, in a paper read before the Societe Medicale des Hopitaux, as exhibited in two cases within his personal observation. One of these was that of a young lady who visited at her mother's, January 2, the latter complaining of slight malaise, but on the following day developed mumps; on January 21, her daughter, who had seen her on the 24, but not subsequently, was likewise attacked, and in the interval she had seen no person who was suffering from that aliment. It is argued by Dr. Rendu, therefore, that a case may be infectious even before the characteristic parotid swelling has made its appearance. In another instance, similar facts transpired—that is, a child ten years old was attacked after being in company with a friend who, although then showing no sign of the complaint, was found a few hours afterward to be suffering from it. From this, therefore, the disease appears evidently infectious at the termination of the period of incubation.

GENERAL MARKET REPORT.

GENERAL MARKET REPORT.

New-York, December 13, 1893.

COTTON—The cotton market to-day has shown a stronger feeling than has been apparent for some time part. The change for the better seems to have originated in Liverpool, with the advices from Manchester also indicating improved conditions at that important centre, which private callies say are due to the large activity in spet cotton in the Liverpool market, where the sales reached 20,000 thete to-day. Cables direct from Liverpool indicate that the spinners are in the market for round lots, and that a still larger business is to be expected unless holders become too arbitrary as to price. In the New-York market speculative interest is de-cliedly more active, with considerable investment buying reported as the to the low prices now current. The shorts are naturally third in is effected, not by the direct action of the prototoplanm, but by means of distrains substances prize duced as results of its activity.
